Galm Named NCC Employee of the Year

Molly Galm, Director of Library Services, received the Outstanding Employee Award at the Northwest Iowa Community College Employee Awards Ceremony on November 8, 2010.

Galm has worked at the College for the past thirteen years in the NCC Library. She was chosen for the outstanding employee award because of her service to NCC, its students, staff and faculty, as well as performance of duties, commitment to personal or professional development, and team/committee participation.

Some comments from the nomination forms about Galm were, "Because of her longevity (13 years), Molly has a very broad grasp of what kind of information and sources are needed for our college staff as well as the students. Molly continues to collaborate with faculty, staff and other Iowa Community College Libraries in providing current materials in the most economical and technological delivery methods available." And, "Molly was instrumental in the switch to the new Polaris computerized cataloging system which automated everything from inventory to the check-out system. When Molly first started, the library had only one computer that was connected to the internet. Now she has many computers all installed with internet access."

Galm resides near Spencer with her husband, David and son, John.
